"The company aims to strengthen its presence pan-India with 36 new offices across 16 states," SLCML said in a statement.

These offices "Krishi Vikas Kendras" will serve as a connecting thread between the digital application of SLCM and its already present physical network of 9,244 warehouses across India, it added.

Farmers, traders and government bodies will consider the offices as a one-stop solution to avail the entire gamut of services, including warehousing, procurement and agri financing, the statement noted.

SLCM said it recently received a patent for its real-time data management methods and it is the only company in India having registered a technology patent in the agri logistics (warehousing) segment.

Capitalising on the testament of the patent, SLCM Group CEO Sandeep Sabharwal said the company is looking forward to scale its 'digital initiative' vertical. The company is currently developing a mobile application that will offer all its services on a single platform.

"We are currently working on various other technologies that have the capability to enable the efficient integration of physical infrastructure with digitised enterprises, thereby strengthening the foundation of 'phygital' agriculture supply chain," he added.

Founded in 2009, SLCM Group offers technology-driven warehousing services, such as scientific storage for agriculture commodities, fumigation, testing and certification and funding against storage receipts in India and Myanmar.
